Reimagining Age-Friendly Living

We've been thinking a lot about how to design housing that can better meet the physical, mental wellbeing and financial requirements of older adults. Recently, we conducted research into the subject and released an Age-Friendly Living Report. The report details innovative approaches and shows how we can reimagine urban centres as mixed-use neighbourhoods that allow people to age-in-place in an environment that is well connected to culture, transit, healthcare and a range of other amenities.

We also hosted a conversation with industry experts Dr. Mark Lachmann (Bridgepoint Campus, Sinai Health), Andrea DelZotto (Tridel), Thomas Wellner (Revera), Julie Bessant Pelech (Bessant Pelech Associates), our Director of Innovation Michelle Xuereb, and panel moderator Michael Nicin (National Institute on Ageing). The experts discussed the growing need and demand for age-friendly housing, current pressures, and how the development industry can innovate and accelerate age-friendly housing.

Community

BDP Quadrangle has long been a supporter of United Way and we look forward to participating in a range of fundraising activities and events during our annual United Way Week. Our 2020 campaign went fully virtual for the first time and was a great success with fun ways for studio members to get involved, such as trivia night, a cooking competition, a silent auction and a talent show. We're pleased to share that we raised $52,600!

The Emerging Leaders Network (ELN) hosted an event in December in collaboration with SKETCH Toronto. ELN x SKETCH's Art Salon saw artist Pree Rehal lead attendees through an interactive zine making class, and upon the conclusion of the event, ELN donated $5,000 to sponsor a SKETCH Spotlight Scholarship for Black Artists.
